DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

Claims 65-66, 77-78, and 83-95 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as failing to comply with the enablement requirement. The claim(s) contains subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention.

Each of the independent claims 65 and 77, as amended, recites a plurality of regularly aligned second regions of higher average dislocation density relative to a first region, with "at least one of the second regions having a c-axis that is inverted relative to the first region." How would one of ordinary skill have made such regions with inverted c-axis? Is this discussed in the specification? Page 49, line 29, of the specification states that the c-axes of the high-density defect regions may be inverted with respect to low-density defect regions, but the examiner did not find any further discussion of this feature in the specification. Is this shown in a figure? In other words, if seeds are to be used, as apparently contemplated by the specification, how would one obtain seeds having the desired axis alignment?

Art Unit: 2811

Claims 65-66, 77-78, and 83-95 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as failing to comply with the written description requirement. The claim(s) contains subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to reasonably convey to one skilled in the relevant art that the inventor(s), at the time the application was filed, had possession of the claimed invention.

As noted above, the only discussion in the specification of the regions having inverted c-axes appears to be on page 49. Nothing in that discussion says anything about "at least one of the second regions" having the inverted alignment. The teaching is that all of the regions have inverted c-axes. ("In another case, their C-axes may be inverted with respect to low-density defect regions around them.") So the scope of the disclosure is not commensurate with the scope of the claim amendment.
